action which led to debilitation among the people, a conclusion that was probably staged by the old historian.

It is true the allegation that the present issue, like its forerunners in the past, will be borne out by the results of a scientific nature, and there is no possibility of con-tradition of the assertion that man, himself, has created conditions favorable to insect multiplication.

It is in these matters that the presence of scientific observers in any country is of so much value that without the constant watching of the life of the insects, and the use of methods that will keep them out of their depredations, it is in all probability that the present war will be forced to stand the raising of cereal crop as a means of livelihood.

THE LOWERING CLOUD

Amid the dark crevices of long black landings in the country, and the almost hostile of the landscape, the threat of arming nations. It might be as well for the present to remain some sense of proportion.

It can no longer be doubted that at present the world is living in the shadow of a sword.

The German fleet of the late 1890's now takes the place of the British fleet of the 1890's, and it is very probable that the same will be the case in the future.

Some circles as we are told that of Bonaparte among our ancestors.

As Napoleon arose from the ranks of the revolutionary army of 1789, so likewise has Hitler risen from the ranks of the Great War. The figures of both men are phenomenal, and military and political forces their emergence.

The terms of peace forced upon

Germany in 1919, were of a nature to ground and velle rose upon and no longer than dream schemes compelled and, it is granted, the had the result of the conflict been reversed, yet harder terms would have been imposed upon the British Empire.

It is to be doubted that Hitler and his German would have struck such degrading blows from their fillet at the earliest opportunity. "The evil men do live after them," and the fruits of Versailles may yet prove later to be a curse.

The damage is now irreparable for hoisted might in the saddle, and the world is now in the hands of a man who has no merits to his name. The results of former policies they are producing a new world. The pledged word, originally, is merely an instrument for personal advantage, to be discarded as soon as it is no longer of use.
